The caudal spinal accessory nerve has been demonstrated to affect the brachial plexus. There are, however, no descriptions of this structure in the literature. In this study, we present six cases in which the caudal spinal accessory nerve was demonstrated on axial and sagittal images of the head and thorax. In one case, the nerve was isolated and was found to be connected to the stellate ganglion by the ventral rami of the second to sixth cervical spinal nerves. This study reveals that it is important to be aware of this structure and to report it clearly in the operative report and in follow-up examinations. City to keep Addams Trail with new park planned New York City is committed to keeping the Addams Trail as a community asset and committing $2 million toward a new park on the eastern portion of the trail. About 500,000 residents and visitors use the 2.5-mile stretch of parkland every year. Mayor Michael Bloomberg made the announcement at the Addams Trail Mini-Park in Midtown Manhattan. The park will be designed by the Yerba Buena Center for the Arts, which will retain artistic control over the project. The park also will incorporate interactive and educational features and a children's playground. The city has designated the Addams Trail as a park and recreation corridor, protecting it from development along its 1.2 mile length. However, Mayor Bloomberg said, "it is important that we continue to evaluate the need for additional park space, especially along the Adlersdalen-to-Summit segment of the trail. In fact, the Park Department will be evaluating the possibility of acquiring privately-owned land for an extension of the park to meet community need." New York City's Parks Department and Yerba Buena Center for the Arts will collaborate on the Addams Trail mini-park project, which will preserve cultural and historic resources while providing open space along one of the city's most scenic park and recreation 50b96ab0b6
